As a kid, Andy was the kindest funniest brother that I could have ever wanted. He was always singing to me and telling me jokes and giving me huge hugs! Always! I don't have a single memory of him ever being mad or annoyed by me. He always made me feel that I was a loved little sister. As a teenager, I thought he was mostly embarrassing and a total dork. Then I grew up. I now have two daughters of my own. He treats my girls the exact same way that he used to be with me. Same jokes and songs with some new ones mixed in. It was always so much fun when he would come over, they were always surprised with how much energy he has and how he made them feel that we're such loved and important little nieces in his life! I will miss having him around to visit with, but I am great full for the fun childhood he gave me. I am also happy that he was able to give my girls a ton of fun silly crazy memories ❤️

When Andy and I were kids, I moved to Coronado. Ca. I used the empty packing boxes to make a kid size tunnel from the living room, down the hall, to the kitchen. We started from the living room and made our way to the kitchen. Mom made it more exciting by having two bowls of fruit cocktail waiting at the end of the boxes. It must have made quite an impression on Andy, because the next time he went to the store with his mom, he spotted what he thought was that delectable delight. Marge asked if he was sure that's what he wanted, he insisted he was sure. When he got home, he was disappointed to find that mixed vegetables are not the same as fruit cocktail! If he ever mentioned kaboodles, that was the name of our wonderful tunnel.
